SEC provides additional information regarding the Reports on Acquisition or Disposition of Securities (Form 246-2)

As reported in the news regarding the Reports on Acquisition or Disposition of Securities (Form 246-2) by Miss Supaporn Pimphong, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) would like to clarify that the SEC is expediting an in-depth examination of all facts relating to the reporting person. The SEC has reviewed the matter with the reporting person and received confirmation that the reporting person was the individual who submitted the information through the Form 246-2 reporting system. However, the SEC's examination has identified several inconsistencies in the reported information from seven Form 246-2 reports covering six securities submitted by the reporting person through the system on 30 June 2026 and 2 July 2026. These reports related to acquisitions of securities at different times since 2021, and were only reported on the aforementioned dates. The reports indicated acquisitions of securities by the reporting person and did not reflect any dispositions. The SEC's examination found that, with respect to five securities, the reporting person's name did not appear in the share register books at dates subsequent to the reported acquisitions (while one security remains under examination). In addition, certain reported acquisitions involved types of securities that had never been issued by the relevant issuers, while certain reported acquisitions may have reflected holding proportions that were inconsistent with information disclosed by the listed companies.

In addition, the SEC's further examination found that the reporting person had submitted reports of securities acquisitions under Section 59 of the Securities and Exchange Act B.E. 2535 (1992) (SEA) despite not being a director, executive, or other person subject to reporting obligations under that section. The SEC has therefore removed the Section 59 reports from the system. Furthermore, the SEC has updated the displayed cautionary note associated with the relevant Form 246-2 reports by adding “Under Verification” to provide greater clarity and assist investors in using the information for their investment decisions.

Should it be found that any information reported is inaccurate or false, the SEC stands ready to take action in accordance with the relevant provisions of the SEA. Where a person who is not subject to a reporting obligation intentionally submits information containing false statements, statements likely to cause material misunderstanding, or omissions of material facts, such person shall be liable under Section 302/1 and subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year and a fine not exceeding 100,000 baht.

In addition, should any violation of other laws be found, such as offenses relating to the importation of data into a computer system under the law governing computer-related offenses, the SEC will coordinate with the relevant authorities for further action.

With respect to the Form 246-2 reporting system, it is a disclosure mechanism that is consistent with international practices. The system is based on self-declared reporting, under which persons subject to reporting requirements submit information and certify the accuracy by themselves. The purpose of the system is to inform investors of changes in control, or potential control arising from holdings of convertible securities, which constitute material information for timely investment decision-making. Nevertheless, where concerns arise regarding the accuracy of reported information, the SEC will undertake verification and issue warnings, as well as disclose accurate information to investors.
